As evidenced by the work of Janet Brooks Brammer, A.S.I.D., "good" design requires far more than an ability to put things "together" that are (aesthetically) pleasing. Good design requires flawless planning, open communication and the knowledge from experience of how to orchestrate a "living environment"... not just "pretty rooms". As Brooks explains: "A home must function to enhance one's lifestyle— otherwise it fails, irregardless of appearances."

Years of experience in creating high-end residential and resort-style interiors in a diverse range of styles has placed Brooks in a rather elite standing as a designer who is adept in a variety of genres. Her work, be it contemporary, traditional, southwest or mediterranean is always a vividly unique expression which speaks well of both architecture and construction— consistently serving in terms of function and purpose.

Janet's focus in her work is "personal service". She regards each design project as a new opportunity to assist clients in experiencing the most enjoyable process in building and designing their home. As Janet Brooks states: "the most important thing that I can do for a client as their interior designer is to 'care' about their concerns, accurately 'interpret' the words they use to describe their dreams and desires, 'guide' them in exposure to materials and design options so they will have a strong base from which to make their decisions, and finally to 'orchestrate' all of these elements together into one beautiful seamless symphony".
